

Gallagher Fellowship, Department of Geoscience

Posted: April, 2018

Duration: One to three months (2018-2019 academic year)

Support: Up to $25,000 per year

Thanks to the continued generous support of the Gallagher Family, the Gallagher Fellowship has been established in order to enable the Faculty of Science to attract researchers, practitioners and experts from around the globe for a one- to three-month long Fellowship, with a view of establishing research relationships with our geoscience scholars.

In addition to accelerating, deepening, and broadening geoscience research, the Fellow will enhance experiential learning and innovative teaching within the Faculty of Science and provide our undergraduate and graduate students access to scholarly leaders.

This opportunity could enable scholars who are on leave (i.e. sabbatical) from their home institution to come to the University of Calgary to

- engage in collaborative research,
- form research networks,
- develop geoscience curricula,
- engage with our students,
- initiate larger research grant applications,
- deliver public presentations, and
- produce peer reviewed publications.

The Fellowship will not only attract the very best in the field to Calgary, but will also serve to raise the profile of the university internationally, build academic networks globally, and bring a diverse perspective to students, faculty members and community members in Calgary.

Applications, which should include i) a cover letter detailing the proposed timeline, proposed budget summary (which must be expended in accordance with University regulations), and Fellowship activities, ii) CV, and iii) the names of three references to the Department head. The Fellowship will be awarded before July 1, 2018. Applicants are encouraged to apply by June 1, 2018.
